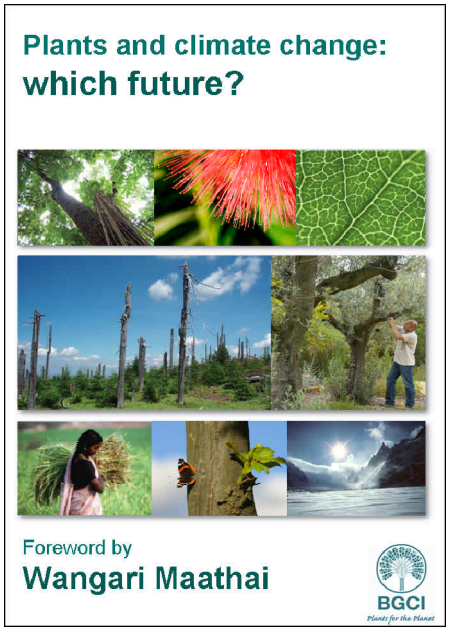
Botanic Gardens Conservation International report on

Plants and climate change: which future?



BGCI's latest report details how plants and climate change are intimately connected, and explains why it is crucially important for us to act now to save the world's plants.

The report provides referenced information and case studies that:

- Examine the effects of climate change on plants (from individual cellular responses to entire ecosystem changes)
- Describe how the impact of climate change on plants will affect the animals and humans who depend upon them
- Explain which species are most at risk of extinction
- Recommend actions needed to ensure a future for the world's plants

Written by Belinda Hawkins, Suzanne Sharrock, and Kay Havens, with contributions from botanists and plant conservation scientists around the world.

Available electronically at www.bgci.org/files/worldwide/climate_change.pdf, and in print: $25* each (includes S&H (continental U.S. only) if ordered by mail or fax).

*BGCI institution members, conservation donors, and new individual members receive a complimentary report and 25% off additional copies.
