The mission of the ISIMA-UJED Botanical Garden is to maintain a scientific collection of living plants that allows their study and familiarization as well as the conservation of the regional flora, with an emphasis on the endemic, threatened and endangered species. The garden's vision is that of a regional natural resource conservation and research center of, national and international impact in which sustainable use, cultural learning, and the care and empathy toward the plant biodiversity is encouraged.

The specific objectives of this garden are framed in the science, conservation, culture, recreation, and diffusion. It also seeks to share the scientific knowledge of the plants with the population via environmental education programs at all the levels in the region, promoting the biological, ecological and economic importance of plant diversity as a means of developing an attitude of affection and respect towards the conservation of the biodiversity in the individual.

Promoting environmental education

The garden celebrated the National Day of the Botanical Gardens for the first time in Mexico in 2006. This garden is registered with the International Agenda for Botanic Gardens in Conservation as part of its commitment to work to achieve its objectives and goals.
